“ When they combined staff from the Stamford Musicland with ours in White Plains, I wasn't sure how that was going to work, but it turned out great. That's how I met Alan. We developed a bond that has outlasted everything around us. Alan Coolbaugh and I hung out, although inexplicably we never went to a show together. Not exactly brothers in arms, we were more like cousins with often different but overlapping tastes in music. I never got Grace Jones like Alan. Still remember when Cyndi Lauper called him to thank him for his tireless plugs with the media that called the store. He helped make that album #1. I brought him down to Greenwich Village a few times to share my favorite record stores. When I was sad about our friends George and Jane Santianna Basanda leaving for Vegas, it was Alan who had dinner with me one night and we toasted our friends new adventure. We saw the Terry Gilliam film Brazil one afternoon and Alan loved it. Not me, but we talked about it for a long time and I started to figure things out. It's cerebral, and it snuck up on me from behind, eventually being one of my favorites. I spent a weekend in Rome, PA with Alan showing me his new life of making wooden toys in the family business. I loved the Jacob's Ladder. They were away at a show so I didn't get to meet them. Throughout our friendship, Alan was one of the kindest and most thoughtful people I knew. He was a cheerleader that encouraged us and celebrated us. He was especially positive after we reconnected. I was looking forward to introducing him to my wife Brenda Hunt Johnston because I was sure they would get along famously. He already loved her, because, well that was Alan. And here we are. The Musicland Gang has been splintering and going in different directions for years. But the bond between us, the love is still strong. I will miss my friend.

“ Gail and family, After learning why Allen would no longer be preparing my taxes I got a little concerned. The following tax season, I realized this was a far more serious matter. He was always soft spoken, kind and considerate during our "Tax" sessions years past.
He shared pictures of the old fashion toys he had reproduce and I could tell he really enjoyed what he did. I always found it fascinating and admired his skills.
I know you will miss him dearly. May the pleasant memories of your earlier life time of growing up and pleasant family memories be embedded in your hearts forever.
Sincerely,
Rich Yoder
